1. The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the plane was the heat. It was a warm blanket, a soft embrace that I had never experienced before. The sun was shining brightly, and the air was thick with the scent of tropical flowers. I felt like I had entered a new world, a place where time stood still and everything was perfect.

2. As I walked along the beach, I noticed the sound of waves crashing against the shore. It was a soothing melody, a lullaby that had been waiting for me. The sand was soft and warm, and the water was clear and blue. I felt like I had found a hidden gem, a secret paradise that only a few people knew about.

3. The next day, I went to the market. It was a bustling place, filled with people and the smell of fresh produce. I saw everything I had ever dreamed of: exotic fruits, colorful spices, and handmade crafts. I felt like I had been transported to a magical land, a place where the impossible became possible.

4. One evening, I sat on a bench under a large tree. The moon was full and bright, and the stars were twinkling in the sky. I felt a sense of peace and tranquility that I had never known before. It was as if the universe was whispering to me, telling me that I had found my true home.

5. In the end, I realized that this was not just a vacation; it was a journey. I had discovered a part of myself that I had never known existed. I had found a place where I belonged, a place where I could be who I truly was. And I knew that I would never leave.

6. The journey was not without its challenges, but each one was met with a smile and a heart full of love. I had found my purpose, my passion, and my forever. I was home.

These places are the battlefields within which American universities must fight to save their souls in order to do the thing we programmed for them, namely, to enlighten the masses, that is to say, to save them from the darkness of their own minds.
